Systematic differences in inflammatory mediators between arthroplasty and traumatic implant loosening of the hip. The aetiology of hip implant loosening is unknown, but it is generally considered as a multicomponent problem. There is no consensus on which of the components need surgical revision and which of the components may stay. The purpose of the current study was to evaluate how alterations of markers of infection, osteolysis and periprosthetic inflammation are associated with septic loosening of the hip implant. Forty-eight patients who had hip replacement surgery with loosening of one of the components and 44 patients with pain and radiological signs of implant loosening without infection were enrolled in this study. Radiographs were analysed for signs of loosening and markers of infection (proteus agglutination), osteolysis (calcium hydroxyapatite [HA] deposition) and periprosthetic inflammation were evaluated from blood, aspirated synovial fluid and a synovial tissue sample. The sensitivity for the identification of infection was much lower in patients with loosening compared to pain patients. Mean levels of the markers of infection, calcific deposition and periprosthetic inflammation were significantly higher in the loosening group and the differences between the groups were mostly significant (p < 0.05). The crash occurred at about 2 p.m. in the intersection of California Avenue and Gale Avenue, near the San Mateo Union High School. The minivan hit a pickup truck heading west.
